"Women To The Front" in Times of March 5, will receive and did receive the endorsement of every true woman in the land. One paragraph particularly I remember impressed me, viz: "Be it as may all branches of work are equally honorable and it is for woman herself to elevate or degrade her line of work." Just so with any honorable avocation beset by a boy. In "John Halifax, of course it is a family quarrel but it sometimes becomes serious and causes final and permanent separation. Blaise with many others has sought another mooring. The Republicans are divided to the point where they are not even coming for action and a leader speaks they will all fall into line and don't you forget it and if you don't watch, these family fends will make Bradley at Frankfort and Harrison, McKinley at Cincinnati and Cleveland at the White House. This paper of last issue calls for expressions on either side.

Miss Lillie Avitt, who had been visiting friends at Hardinsburg, came home Saturday.

Miss Janie Hendry is looking quite well and appears to be enjoying good health again.

The present was due to becoming a very durable one in the tapestry of my life. I manifested a Democratic spirit of investigation one evening last week by having an interview with J. W. Lewis in his pleasant home to hear his fundamental articles of faith. Mr. Lewis has never had political opinions, no ax to grind, no wheel within wheels, but acts upon his supreme principle of doing right, which makes him a silver man for years has converted him, to a gold basis in opinion.

A certain gentleness in this neighborhood whose name is withheld on account of the fact that it is a small town, is the scene of the following incident. It was the day of the great valentines this February but seems that he received just double the number. So Mr. Stewart, on the way to the Kentucky county, loaned John Claycomb old "Morgin" to help break his corn ground, but the old horse concluded he had served his time dragging the plow and was not going to be jumped out of John's field and was gone about a week, jumping fences and making a good thing of it. Sugar Creek, N. Y. Walden and New Hope

The gentleman that got so badly let last Sunday has my sympathy. I know just what it is to get let by the kick of a horse, and I know how it feels. "If I find you don't succeed, try, again," and we will perhaps some day come out victorious just like the frog did when he was let by the kick of a horse. One lost his nerve and cried, "I sink." The companion replied in a disgusted tone, "Hustle up, duffer, you know you can't sink." The man was hustled and jumped up and down all night. Dawn came and his continual agitation and unending roar had meanwhile exhausted the creature to sleep, and the two walked out on dry land.

A Valuable Find.
After years of study and labor, there has at last been discovered a new and startling remedy for a disease which has been a scourge to patients, who have despaired of ever being cured, the results have been, in good cases, a complete cure. It is a new and powerful cure, unequalled as a positive remedy in all cases of Chronic Arterio Sclerotic, Rheumatism, Gout, Lumbago, Sciatica, Neuritis, Neuralgia, Migraine, Headache, Dysmenorrhea and all kindred affections. It is also a valuable Blood Purifier, being especially useful in Eczema, Psoriasis, the disease of the Liver and Kidneys. It is absolutely free from all narcotics. Severe attacks are relieved in from one to three days and the patient is able to resume his or her usual avocations in from ten to eighteen days. For sale by Chas. C. Lewis.

While I have much faith in the sin-nity of my friends on gold monometal-lism, I cannot but be fully convinced that the remonetization of silver would be the better and that bi-metallicism is an impossibility that can be proved in facts in history. Neither can I see any double standard in impermissible if the two metals cannot be held as money on a parity. Up to 1873 silver was our sole unit of account and why can't a dollar mean a silver dollar?
In looking over the financial affairs of our countries we find for a long time that France held the two metals as money. Great Britain was the only European nation with a gold standard up to certain stage. Listen to the argument of bi-metallicism. Germany had a silver dollar, not to mention other nations.

V. — FLAMES OF OBSCURITY.

The instruction in Lyons called it itself before the arrival of Lieutenant Bonaparte's contingent. The municipal ity proved itself sufficiently strong to put down the insurgents without the assistance of the military arm. Fighting for a month, Napoleon's company, arriving in due time, was stationed in the city for a month. It was a small garrison of war for him who was distained, with less than a decade, to lead a victorious army over the Alps into Italy.

The disturbances at Lyons put a date to Bonaparte's career at Valence. He had remained in that place from the fall of 1785 to August of 1787. This period of twenty-three months, though obscure in its manifestations, was one of the most important in his life. It was the transition from youth to maturity. At this stage in the lives of men, the mind passes rapidly from one condition to another. Particularly is this true if the study has been the mood and genius of the person concerned.

The ambition of the young officer now shot out in several directions. Deeply impressed with the fame and power of the great authors who were writing, he then was setting the world afire, he too, would be an author? Such was the quality of this singular personage that he never distrusted himself in anything.

Before the end of his eighteenth year he conceived himself able to write a history! Corsica should be his theme.

He would write the annals of his philosophy, telling him that he himself, though a youth, was already a writer. He begged the historian to excuse his audacity.

He flattered him by saying that indigence, extended to a neophyte, was a mark of genius.

Don't ask for credit.—G. E. Drury.

Among the subjects for discussion at the Goshen Ministerial Meeting is "What part may female members take in public worship, and in church work."

The question will doubtless be handled the subject well, but our opinion is that woman and her work is in the hands of a higher power. Nearly two thousand years ago the commission "Go ye into all the world and evangelize" was given to great men and yet the harvest truly is great and the laborers are few. Men are unworthy of the trust and we believe God is calling out women to the work. The good women who lately were here at Bewleyville, we believe, were truly called of God to reach the way of salvation.

Our Sunday services March 24th were Sabbath School, Class Meeting and Prayer League. All of these were very well attended, and we received spiritual benefit. We missed a regular or two, but hope they were doing good at other places.

CHAPTER XIII.

TWOED OVER.

There was a rattling of wheels on the soft road, and looking up Ratigan saw the messenger returning, followed by an ambulance. Driving to Miss Bagg's, who was still lying in the grass, the driver backed it up to her, while the messenger dismounted and opened the door. The ambulance stood ready to lift the prisoner into the vehicle. But Miss Bagg waved them all away except the corporal, and taking his hand she led him to her. The corporal was too much for her. Her head fell on his shoulder, and for a moment she lost consciousness. Ratigan took her off her feet and lifting her into the ambulance laid her on the cushions.

"O'U ride at the foot," he said to the others. "One of ye lead me horse." When they came to the place where each had successfully endeavored to follow her before daylight, they found the road lined with soldiers, who only brought them there to see the woman who had succeeded in breaking through a whole chain of sentinels. They had all heard of the exploit and crowded about the ambulance as it passed, but were kept away by the fact of the woman who had broken through the chain of sentinels, who dropped back to the side and roared. This prevented any further conversation between Ratigan and Miss Bagg, except on the part of the latter, but the corporal managed to keep her hand in his under a blanket, unobserved. At last the ambulance pulled up before the headquarters of the division where camp they had entered, and Ratigan suddenly became conscious of the fact that he must turn his prisoner over to them, doubtless to be dealt with summarily, for he well knew that would naturally receive prompt attention.

An officer with a captain's shoulder straps came out from headquarters and surveyed the ambulance. He was a dapper little fellow, fat and red faced. "Who've you got there?" he asked of Ratigan.

"A lady sir," he said. "The woman who ran the guards last night?" "O' captured her on the road below," he said. "If it's the guard duty of this division is in a fine condition of mind. Get her out of a whole chain of sentinels."

"She's badly hurt, captain," said Ratigan, who had stepped down to the ground and saluted. "I can alright," said Miss Bagg, feebly. "And getting as best she could to the door of the ambulance Ratigan helped her out. She looked faint, but stood by the aid of the corporal. "Take her in to the general," said the little captain. "He wants to see her."

As the tent was a few feet from the tent, there was no great room in it. Miss Bagg went inside, while the corporal stood directly outside, with his hand on the tent pole.

"I must have you searched," said the general to the prisoner. "They have somewhat hesitatingly. 'It's rather awkward not having a woman in camp.' 'I will relieve you of this burden,' said the prisoner, with dignity, and putting her hand into her pocket she drew forth a bundle of papers, which she handed to him.

"What are these?" asked the surprised commander. "Copies of intercepted telegrams."

The general uttered an exclamation, and taking the papers ran over them with his eye.

He looked up at the woman, who, save for the pallor occasioned by her fall from the collapse of the ambulance, appeared unmoved. There was admiration in the eye of the man who gazed at her. He was astonished to find a woman with which he handled him documents that would warrant his hanging her in a tree without a moment's delay, and above all there was a feeling of respect and consciousness of having done a duty, a look of triumph under defeat, that compelled his reverence as well as his admiration.

"Are you aware," he said, "that with these dispatches in your hands, and beyond our lines, you would hold this army at your mercy?"

"I am," she said. "And that captured with them on your person your life is forfeited?"

"Certainly."

There are people who cannot break a steady stand in one who may be naturally expected to break down in their presence. The general was one of these. In proportion as he admired her firmness he was desirous to force her to show some giving way. He did analyze his feelings and attribute his desire to any such cause. He yielded to it without realizing that he was doing so.

"The natural method of procedure in this case," he said, looking at her sternly, "is for me to demand of you the documents and the circumstances attending it to headquarters. Word comes back to try you by drumhead, a drumhead trial and hang you to tomorrow morning."

"Well," she said. "It is the end of the story." There was silence for a few moments while they regarded each other.

"It is not the end of the story, general," she said. "The story of a life. Death is but a transition. It places the Chief Commander to design me a fruitless task. It is not for me to die. I am but one of his soldiers, fighting with my brothers for my people."

She had conquered. There was something so forcible in her words, something so truly grand in her manner, that the man who would break her spirit desisted. He regarded her admiringly and was silent.

"All I ask, general," she said, "is that you see that she is not that there be no greater delay than necessary. Now I have a strength which may be worn away by delay, with death staring me in the face."

Still the officer did not speak. He was thinking—thinking how he could get rid of so unpleasant a duty as the trial and execution of this splendid woman. He feared that should he report her capture to headquarters he would get the same reply as in the case he had.

"It does not matter who does the work, so long as it must be done. Perhaps not to you. It matters a great deal to me. My hands are clean. I don't care to do it."

His conversation was going on. The corporal was listening and observing the speaker with a palpitating heart. There was something so cold in the general's tones that the corporal felt a repugnance at his prisoner being in his custody. He preferred that she should be sent to some one else and was relieved when he announced his intention to visit the responsibility. Besides the corporal hoped that he would himself be entrusted with the duty.

At some point where the commander would be willing to receive her. The corporal led her to headquarters, general," he said.

"Ah, my friend," said the general, "what a wonderful reversal, 'are you here?' I had forgotten that you are here. I can conduct her to headquarters if you desire it, general."

"I am not in the habit of receiving suggestions from my brigade or regimental commanders, much less a corporal," he said.

Ratigan saw that he had made a mistake and said nothing. The general regarded him with a look that was plain to him that the man was in the presence of his prisoner.

"Corporal, you may go to your camp," he said.

"Orderly," called the general to a man standing near, "take this woman to the ambulance. If you will, use words he could not resist a last attempt with his presence, his masterful command, his piercing eyes, his cold, unfeeling, but she was without the least intention of being so treated. She turned and walked toward the ambulance.

The general called her back. "You are not so much satisfied with my treatment of you," he said in a tone in which there was something of sarcasm. "She's badly hurt, captain," said Ratigan, who had stepped down to the ground and saluted.

"I can alright," said Miss Bagg, feebly. "And getting as best she could to the door of the ambulance Ratigan helped her out. She looked faint, but stood by the aid of the corporal.

"Take her in to the general," said the little captain. "He wants to see her."

As the tent was a few feet from the tent, there was no great room in it. Miss Bagg went inside, while the corporal stood directly outside, with his hand on the tent pole.

"I must have you searched," said the general to the prisoner. "They have somewhat hesitatingly. 'It's rather awkward not having a woman in camp.' 'I will relieve you of this burden,' said the prisoner, with dignity, and putting her hand into her pocket she drew forth a bundle of papers, which she handed to him.

"What are these?" asked the surprised commander. "Copies of intercepted telegrams."

The general uttered an exclamation, and taking the papers ran over them with his eye.

He looked up at the woman, who, save for the pallor occasioned by her fall from the collapse of the ambulance, appeared unmoved. There was admiration in the eye of the man who gazed at her. He was astonished to find a woman with which he handled him documents that would warrant his hanging her in a tree without a moment's delay, and above all there was a feeling of respect and consciousness of having done a duty, a look of triumph under defeat, that compelled his reverence as well as his admiration.

"Certainly."

There are people who cannot break a steady stand in one who may be naturally expected to break down in their presence. The general was one of these. In proportion as he admired her firmness he was desirous to force her to show some giving way. He did analyze his feelings and attribute his desire to any such cause. He yielded to it without realizing that he was doing so.

"The natural method of procedure in this case," he said, looking at her sternly, "is for me to demand of you the documents and the circumstances attending it to headquarters. Word comes back to try you by drumhead, a drumhead trial and hang you to tomorrow morning."

"Well," she said. "It is the end of the story." There was silence for a few moments while they regarded each other.

"It is not the end of the story, general," she said. "The story of a life. Death is but a transition. It places the Chief Commander to design me a fruitless task. It is not for me to die. I am but one of his soldiers, fighting with my brothers for my people."

She had conquered. There was something so forcible in her words, something so truly grand in her manner, that the man who would break her spirit desisted. He regarded her admiringly and was silent.

"All I ask, general," she said, "is that you see that she is not that there be no greater delay than necessary. Now I have a strength which may be worn away by delay, with death staring me in the face."

Still the officer did not speak. He was thinking—thinking how he could get rid of so unpleasant a duty as the trial and execution of this splendid woman. He feared that should he report her capture to headquarters he would get the same reply as in the case he had.

"It does not matter who does the work, so long as it must be done. Perhaps not to you. It matters a great deal to me. My hands are clean. I don't care to do it."

His conversation was going on. The corporal was listening and observing the speaker with a palpitating heart. There was something so cold in the general's tones that the corporal felt a repugnance at his prisoner being in his custody. He preferred that she should be sent to some one else and was relieved when he announced his intention to visit the responsibility. Besides the corporal hoped that he would himself be entrusted with the duty.

At some point where the commander would be willing to receive her. The corporal led her to headquarters, general," he said.

"Ah, my friend," said the general, "what a wonderful reversal, 'are you here?' I had forgotten that you are here. I can conduct her to headquarters if you desire it, general."

"I am not in the habit of receiving suggestions from my brigade or regimental commanders, much less a corporal," he said.

Geo. F. Askins, of McQuady, was in town yesterday. George says he has a plant bed 110 feet by 12 feet wide, is doing plowing for corn and ready to plant. His oats are coming up nicely and all his farm work is up and he is in good shape for the coming in spring. (George is for ever silver.)

Mr. Beverly, Cloverport's tobacco merchant, was passing through the neighborhood last week, buying some tobacco. He is paying fair prices and is coming again in a few days to buy all the seed in the neighborhood, if the farmers will sell—Chamber's correspondent in Hancock Clarion.

Engagement of Miss Rose Holt, of Holt, Ky., and Mr. Gus Luckett, of Owensboro, is announced. The wedding party takes place the early part of June.

Miss Holt is well known here, having spent several winters here. Her mother occupied the home of Hon. E. J. McDermott two seasons ago. Miss Rose Holt were great social favorites. Miss Rose Holt entertained the To Club very handsomely on several occasions—Courier-Journal.

Driver, Horse and Wagon All Go Down.

A frightful accident occurred at the wharf here yesterday about 3 o'clock. W. H. Bowman and Scott's horse and driver were drowned while attempting to water the horse at the river.

Will Lightfoot, colored, is the driver. He and Thurston Clark and Wick Bohler, all colored, were in the wagon and drove down the wharf, it is supposed to water the horse. The river high and the water steep, and rocky. The boys were in a hurry to get the horse straight into the river and before they knew it they were in deep water and over the horse's head. The horse became frightened and unmanageable. This frightened the boys and two of them, Will Lightfoot and Thurston Clark jumped out and left Wick Bohler holding the lines and in less than five minutes the boy, horse and wagon all went under and it was the last seen of them.

Wick was about sixteen years old, the son of Kitty Zahrling, a very respectable colored woman living in this city. The body had not been recovered as we go to press. The horse and wagon were fished out last yesterday evening.

THE NEW GAS WELL.

It is a Gasifier and One of the Best in the Field.

The Gulf Petroleum Gas Company struck a big flow of gas in their new well here Monday evening at a depth of 800 feet. It is one of the best wells in the field. The nature of the gas is estimated to be about a quarter-million feet and with a small hole it is thought it can be made to half-million. The strike caused considerable excitement and gas interests are looking up. The company values the new well at $10,000.

For Good County Roads.

There has been a great deal about the roads in the county in the past few weeks, and the general expression of the people is that something ought to be done to improve them.

The present road law has, so far as Brockenridge county is concerned, proven a failure, as will any law that is one-sided and unfair.

Under the old law the county was paying the laboring class have to keep the roads in repair for the tax-payer, and they recognize that fact. It is almost impossible for a voter to vote for the law's work out of his hands. If the law is not now could be enforced we could have good roads, but we have tried it long enough now to know it can not be made a success.

The new law is worthy of a trial and should the Fiscal Court adopt it, and it does not prove what we expect of it they have the power to repeal it at the next term of court. There are some very good features in it, and especially for the laboring man. Under the present law, a man may be wanted out for his road work two days in each week until the roads are in good condition, and is required to pay $1.50 per day, and at the present price of farm labor, fifty cents per day it will take him three days or forty-five hours to earn $1.50. If the new law is adopted and a head tax be added of $1.00 and a nominal sum on the property say ten cents on the one hundred dollars value of property, the law says that eight hours shall be a day's work on the county roads and that the pay shall be $1.00 per day, so in twenty hours he can not only half the time, the road hands can earn money enough to settle his taxes and be square with the county.

Under the new law there need not be a large contingent tax each year as has been the case, as the supervisor has the power and authority to work all delinquents on the roads and in that way make a saving to the county from two to three thousand dollars each year.

As for the benefits to the property holders, they are too numerous to mention, to say nothing of the pleasure and convenience of having good roads.

Let us get out of the old rut and show our sister counties that we are not dead even asleep but are fully up to the times, a live, wide-awake, progressive people. Other counties have adopted the law and have found it a success, and why should we plod along in the mud and mire, when we could have good roads for less than the old way costs.

The court has the power to adopt the law and make the levy and if they do not we will see to it that we have good roads for the last roads as the people are demanding a change.
